ACCOUNT MANAGEMENT AND BANKING SERVICES POLICY

Policy ID: CPB-POL-001
Version: 1.0
Policy Category: Account Management and Banking Services

1. Purpose

This policy establishes the conditions and procedures governing the opening, operation, maintenance, monitoring, and closure of bank accounts. It defines the responsibilities of customers and the bank in relation to account eligibility, identity verification, account access, transaction records, account restrictions, account inactivity, and account-related complaints.

The policy aims to promote accurate account information, secure banking operations, transparent customer communication, and consistent handling of account-related requests.

2. Scope

This policy applies to the following banking services:

- Current accounts and savings accounts.
- Account opening and eligibility.
- Individual, joint, and minor accounts.
- Account access and account maintenance.
- Customer identification and document verification.
- Account statements and balance enquiries.
- Transaction discrepancies and missing deposits.
- Account restrictions, suspension, and dormancy.
- Changes to customer information.
- Account closure and remaining balances.
- Account-related service charges.
- Account-related customer complaints.

Specific account products may have additional terms, eligibility requirements, transaction limits, charges, or operating conditions. Where a product-specific condition differs from a general condition, the applicable product terms shall determine the requirement.

3. Definitions

Account Holder: An individual legally recognized as the owner of a bank account.

Current Account: An account generally intended for routine banking transactions, subject to the features and conditions of the selected product.

Savings Account: An account intended primarily for saving funds, potentially offering interest, profit, bonuses, or other benefits according to its product terms.

Joint Account: An account held by two or more individuals under an agreed operating mandate.

Minor Account: An account maintained for an individual who has not reached the applicable age of majority, subject to the relevant legal and product requirements.

Account Restriction: A limitation on account access, withdrawals, transfers, or other account operations.

Dormant Account: An account classified as dormant under the applicable regulatory requirements and account terms.

Account Statement: A record of transactions, deposits, withdrawals, charges, and balances over a specified period.

Complaint Reference Number: A unique identifier assigned to a successfully registered complaint.

Account Closure: The termination of an account relationship after the applicable requirements and procedures have been completed.

4. Account Opening and Eligibility

4.1 General eligibility requirements

Eligibility for opening a bank account varies according to the account type, the bank's product conditions, the applicant's age, residency status, identification documents, intended account usage, and applicable legal and regulatory requirements.

An applicant may be required to provide:

- A valid identity document accepted by the bank.
- Evidence of residency or immigration status, where applicable.
- Current contact information, including a telephone number and email address.
- Address information or proof of address, where required.
- Employment, income, source-of-funds, or other supporting information when required for the selected product or verification process.
- Additional documents requested by the bank to satisfy its account-opening requirements.

The precise list of documents may differ for residents, non-residents, citizens, expatriates, minors, and other customer categories. Applicants must confirm the requirements applicable to their circumstances and selected account.

4.2 Age requirements

Age requirements depend on the account product and applicable regulations.

An adult account may require the applicant to have reached the legally applicable age of majority. A minor may be eligible for a specific minor account, subject to its terms, guardian requirements, and operating restrictions.

Where a minor account is converted or reviewed after the account holder reaches the applicable age, additional identification, consent, or account-maintenance procedures may apply.

No single age threshold or guardian arrangement shall be assumed to apply to every account product without checking its terms.

4.3 Residency and identification requirements

The bank may distinguish between residents, non-residents, citizens, and other customer categories when determining eligibility and documentation requirements.

Applicants must provide accurate and current identification and residency information. If a document is expired, incomplete, inconsistent, or cannot be verified, the bank may request updated information before completing the application or allowing certain services.

Approval is subject to successful verification and satisfaction of the requirements applicable to the selected account.

4.4 Account-specific conditions

Different accounts may have different minimum balance requirements, salary transfer conditions, transaction limits, interest or profit arrangements, service fees, and eligibility restrictions.

For example, a salary-linked account may have conditions relating to salary credits, while a savings product may specify a minimum balance or conditions for earning interest or other benefits.

These examples illustrate possible product differences; the actual requirements must be taken from the applicable product terms and schedule of charges.

4.5 Rejection or incomplete applications

An application may remain pending or be declined if required documents are missing, information cannot be verified, eligibility conditions are not satisfied, or the application does not meet applicable legal, regulatory, or bank requirements.

Applicants may be asked to correct information or provide additional documents. Submission of an application does not guarantee approval.

Where the reason for rejection cannot be disclosed or confirmed, the applicant should be directed to the bank's authorized customer service channel.

5. Account Ownership and Operating Arrangements

5.1 Individual accounts

An individual account is operated by the account holder, subject to the account's terms, verification requirements, and any applicable legal restrictions.

The account holder is responsible for maintaining accurate account information and protecting access credentials.

5.2 Joint accounts

Joint accounts are subject to the operating instructions agreed with the bank.

The mandate may require a single authorized signature, joint authorization, or another approved arrangement. The applicable mandate determines who may initiate transactions and make account-related requests.

Changes to joint-account ownership, operating authority, or authorized signatories must follow the bank's required procedures and documentation.

5.3 Minor accounts

Minor accounts are subject to the applicable account terms and legal requirements. A parent, guardian, or other authorized person may be required to open or operate the account, depending on the product.

The extent of the guardian's authority, transaction permissions, and procedures when the account holder reaches adulthood shall be determined by the relevant account terms.

5.4 Authorized representatives

A person acting on behalf of an account holder must have authority recognized by the bank. The bank may require supporting documents, identity verification, or a specific authorization process before accepting instructions.

A family relationship alone does not automatically establish authority to access or operate another person's account.

6. Account Access and Customer Security

6.1 Authorized access

Customers shall access their accounts through channels and methods approved by the bank, such as authorized branches, online banking, mobile banking, ATMs, or other supported services.

Access may depend on valid credentials, successful authentication, account status, device security, and any additional verification required for the requested transaction.

6.2 Protection of credentials

Customers must protect passwords, PINs, OTPs, authentication codes, cards, and other security credentials.

Customers should not share these details with other individuals or disclose them in ordinary customer service conversations. If credentials may have been exposed, the customer should promptly use the bank's official security or reporting channels.

6.3 Suspicious access

Where unauthorized access or suspicious activity is suspected, the customer should report the matter promptly.

The bank may apply verification procedures or temporary security restrictions where permitted by its terms and applicable requirements. Such measures may be used to protect the account while the matter is reviewed.

6.4 Access problems

Customers experiencing login failures, unavailable services, or difficulties accessing account information should first use the bank's authorized support channels.

If the issue remains unresolved, the customer may submit a complaint describing the affected service, approximate time of occurrence, and any error message that can safely be shared.

Passwords, PINs, CVVs, and OTPs must not be included in complaint descriptions.

7. Account Information and Statements

7.1 Access to account information

Customers may obtain account information and statements through the channels and procedures made available for their account product.

The availability, format, historical period, and delivery method of statements may vary by account type and service channel.

7.2 Accuracy of statements

Customers should review their account statements and transaction records for accuracy.

If a customer identifies an unfamiliar transaction, an incorrect amount, a missing deposit, a duplicate entry, or an unexpected charge, the customer should report the issue promptly through the appropriate channel.

7.3 Requests for corrections

A request to correct account information or investigate a statement discrepancy must contain sufficient details to identify the issue.

Depending on the nature of the discrepancy, the bank may examine transaction records, payment information, supporting documents, or other relevant evidence before deciding whether a correction is appropriate.

A correction shall not be treated as completed until the bank confirms the relevant action.

7.4 Statement delivery issues

Where a statement has not been received or cannot be accessed, the customer may request assistance through an authorized channel.

The investigation may consider the selected delivery method, registered contact information, service availability, and the statement period requested.

8. Account Balance and Transaction Discrepancies

8.1 Types of discrepancies

Account-related discrepancies may include:

- An unexpected debit or withdrawal.
- A deposit that has not appeared in the account.
- A duplicate transaction entry.
- An incorrect transaction amount.
- A transaction that remains pending.
- An unfamiliar fee or service charge.
- A difference between an expected balance and the displayed balance.

8.2 Information required for investigation

The customer may be asked to provide the transaction date, amount, description, reference number, payment channel, or other relevant information.

Only information necessary to identify and investigate the discrepancy should be requested. Sensitive authentication credentials must never be requested.

8.3 Pending transactions

A pending transaction may not have reached its final processing state. Its status and the treatment of any associated amount depend on the payment method, transaction type, and applicable processing rules.

A pending transaction should not automatically be treated as a confirmed loss, a completed debit, or a guaranteed future reversal.

8.4 Investigation and correction

The responsible team shall review the available transaction details and supporting evidence.

If an error is established, any adjustment, reversal, or correction must follow the applicable authorization procedures. If the evidence is insufficient, additional information may be requested.

The customer shall be informed of the outcome through the applicable communication process.

9. Account Restrictions, Suspension, and Verification

9.1 Reasons for restrictions

Account operations may be restricted for reasons including incomplete or outdated identification documents, security concerns, verification requirements, suspected unauthorized activity, regulatory obligations, legal instructions, or other grounds permitted by applicable terms and requirements.

The existence of a restriction does not, by itself, establish that the customer has committed an offence or that the bank has reached a final decision about the account.

9.2 Requests for clarification

A customer who cannot withdraw funds, initiate a transfer, use a banking service, or access an account should contact the bank through an authorized channel.

The customer may be required to complete identity verification or submit updated documents before the matter can be reviewed.

9.3 Review and restoration

A request to remove a restriction is subject to the reason for the restriction, the completion of required checks, and any applicable legal or regulatory conditions.

Restoration cannot be guaranteed before those requirements have been satisfied.

Where the bank cannot disclose certain details, it may provide only the information permitted by the applicable requirements.

9.4 Expired identification documents

Customers are responsible for keeping required identification and residency documents up to date.

The bank may limit access to particular services when required documents expire and updated documents are not provided, subject to the applicable terms and requirements.

Customers should use the bank's approved process to submit updated documents and confirm when the update has been accepted.

10. Inactive and Dormant Accounts

10.1 Account inactivity

An account with no transactions for a period may be subject to inactivity-related review, operational restrictions, or dormancy procedures.

The consequences of inactivity depend on the account product and applicable regulatory requirements. Customers should not assume that every account becomes dormant after the same period.

10.2 Dormancy classification

Where a specific regulatory or contractual definition applies, the account shall be classified according to that definition.

Dormancy classification shall be determined according to the applicable account terms and regulatory requirements. Where the applicable source does not establish a specific inactivity period, no universal period shall be assumed. Restrictions on inactive accounts, reactivation procedures, and the treatment of unclaimed balances shall be determined according to the relevant terms and requirements.

These provisions should be applied only where the cited account terms and regulatory conditions are applicable.

10.3 Reactivation

A customer seeking to reactivate an inactive or dormant account may be required to verify their identity, update documents, or complete additional procedures.

The exact reactivation process depends on the account status and the bank's applicable requirements.

10.4 Unclaimed balances

Unclaimed funds may be subject to transfer or handling under applicable regulatory requirements and account terms.

Customers seeking to recover an unclaimed balance should contact the relevant bank or authority through an authorized channel and complete the required verification process.

11. Changes to Customer Information

11.1 Customer responsibility

Customers must keep their registered contact details and other required information accurate and current.

Relevant information may include telephone number, email address, residential address, residency status, identification details, or employment information where required by the bank.

11.2 Change requests

Requests to update customer information must be submitted through an authorized channel. The bank may require identity verification, supporting documents, or additional confirmation before accepting the change.

11.3 Processing and confirmation

A submitted update request does not necessarily mean the change has been completed. Customers should follow the applicable procedure and confirm completion where necessary.

If an update fails or the information remains incorrect, the customer may submit a service request or complaint with details of the attempted change.

11.4 Consequences of outdated information

Outdated or unverifiable information may affect access to certain services, completion of transactions, or the bank's ability to contact the customer.

Any restriction or additional verification must be handled according to the applicable terms and requirements.

12. Account Maintenance and Service Charges

12.1 Account maintenance

Account maintenance includes requests relating to account details, statements, account features, service access, and other routine account operations.

The available services and applicable conditions may vary by account type and service channel.

12.2 Fees and charges

Account maintenance fees, minimum balance charges, statement fees, transfer charges, and other service costs shall be governed by the applicable account terms and schedule of charges.

Charges may vary according to the product, transaction type, currency, service channel, or other stated conditions.

A fee must not be assumed to apply to every account merely because it applies to one account product.

12.3 Fee disputes

Customers who identify an unfamiliar or unexpected charge may request an explanation or submit a complaint.

The review may consider the applicable schedule of charges, account type, transaction details, and any relevant exemption or promotional terms.

Any refund or reversal of a fee is subject to the applicable terms and the outcome of the review.

13. Account Closure

13.1 Customer-initiated closure

Customers may request account closure through the bank's authorized channels, subject to the applicable account terms and verification requirements.

The bank may require the account holder to confirm their identity, provide instructions for handling any remaining balance, and complete other required procedures.

13.2 Outstanding obligations

Pending transactions, outstanding fees, linked services, overdrafts, or other obligations may affect the closure process.

The customer may need to resolve relevant obligations or follow additional instructions before closure can be completed.

13.3 Remaining balance

Any remaining balance shall be handled according to the applicable account terms, currency arrangements, charges, and legal requirements.

Where conversion or other deductions apply, the relevant conditions should be explained to the customer in accordance with the applicable terms.

13.4 Bank-initiated closure

An account may be closed by the bank in circumstances permitted by the applicable account terms and requirements. Notice, restrictions, and the handling of remaining funds shall follow the applicable provisions.

13.5 Confirmation of closure

A closure request remains a request until the bank completes the required procedure and confirms closure.

Customers should retain the closure confirmation and any relevant correspondence for their records.

14. Account-Related Complaint Handling

14.1 Eligible complaint subjects

Customers may submit complaints concerning account opening, access, statements, balances, account restrictions, customer information, account maintenance, charges, dormancy, or closure.

14.2 Complaint information

A complaint should describe the issue, the affected service, the approximate date, and the relevant transaction or request reference where available.

Supporting documents may be requested when necessary. Customers should not include passwords, PINs, CVVs, or OTPs.

14.3 Registration and reference number

Each successfully registered complaint shall receive a unique complaint reference number.

The reference number should be provided to the customer and retained for future status enquiries or additional correspondence.

14.4 Assignment and investigation

Complaints shall be categorized according to their subject and assigned to the appropriate service or investigation team.

The responsible team may review account records, request clarification, examine supporting evidence, and determine whether corrective action is appropriate.

14.5 Resolution and escalation

The complaint outcome shall be communicated through the applicable complaint-handling process.

If the customer remains dissatisfied, or the issue remains unresolved, the customer may use the bank's designated escalation process and any further applicable complaint channels.

Specific acknowledgement and resolution timeframes shall be determined by the applicable complaint-handling policy.

15. Customer Responsibilities

Customers are expected to:

1. Provide accurate and complete information when opening or maintaining an account.
2. Submit valid and updated identification documents when required.
3. Keep contact details and other required information current.
4. Protect account credentials, cards, and authentication information.
5. Review statements and report suspicious or incorrect transactions promptly.
6. Provide relevant supporting details when raising a service request or complaint.
7. Use authorized channels for account changes and sensitive requests.
8. Retain complaint reference numbers and important correspondence.
9. Comply with applicable account terms and authorized banking instructions.

16. Information Confidentiality and Protection

Customer account information shall be handled for authorized banking, service, verification, investigation, and other permitted purposes.

Access to personal and financial information shall be limited according to applicable authorization requirements. Information must be protected against unauthorized access, disclosure, alteration, or loss.

Information may be disclosed to authorities or other permitted parties where required or authorized under applicable law, regulation, or account terms.

Customer information shall be retained and disposed of according to applicable legal, regulatory, and organizational requirements.

17. Exceptions and Interpretation

Where a question concerns a specific account product, the applicable product terms shall be consulted alongside the general account conditions.

Where a requirement depends on residency, age, identification status, account type, transaction type, or regulatory conditions, the applicable requirement shall be determined from the relevant terms and rules.

If a requirement is not established by the available policy documents, it shall not be treated as a confirmed condition. The customer should be directed to the appropriate authorized channel for clarification.

Revisions shall identify the updated version and effective date. Where a policy provision is based on a specific bank document, the applicable source and version should be checked before that provision is updated or applied.
